BEAUTY KIDNAPPED BY WINGED MONSTER ONE MILLION YEARS B.C.

Prehistoric Civilization Up In Arms!

(B.C. Rock-Photo)

A Savage Pteradactyl Kidnaps The Beautiful Raquel Welch In One Of The Exciting Scenes From The New Twentieth Century-Fox Release, One Million Years B.C. The Vivacious Miss Welch Is Constantly Being Followed By Strangers, But The Pteradactyl Incident Was Something Of A First.

"One Million Years B.C." Stones Them At The Cave Theatre!

Fur Is "In" This Spring

The voluptuous Raquel Welch models the original fur bikini, a dyed brontosaurus featuring a low neckline and a hem that plunges two inches below the grilsk. It's the latest in high fashion. Well... maybe it's not so "high" but it's fashion. What can you expect from a bunch of neanderthals!

WEDDING BELLS?

Tumak and Loana were seen getting cozy by the lava quarry last evening. This marks the second time in two nights they have been seen together. It's shameful the way kids are being brought up today.

SCIENTIFIC BREAKTHROUGH!

Grommet Gridgin aims the spear he has just invented as scoffers watch. The scoffers hint that he was really trying to invent the toothpick but got carried away. In any case, this is certainly a boon to mankind. No longer will we have to suffer the fist fight, the hair pulling match, the stone throwing match. Now for the first time man can hope for something better. He can wage full scale war! Ah, progress.

Vincent Van Freebish Stands By His Latest Masterpiece

Our resident wall painter (he prefers the term artist) has just completed his master work. "I call it buffalos," he said. "I don't know why, it just reminds me of my mother." Vincent's big fear is that his contemporary work will not stand the test of time.

The entire population of 1,000,001 b.c. had a reunion, celebrating their making it through another year. Highlight of the evening came when Loana smashed Nupondi's head with a brick. Nice going Loana!

PREHISTORIC MONSTERS ROAM THE EARTH AGAIN IN "One Million Years B.C."

Beast Against Beast For Survival "One Million Years B.C."!

A savage triceratops (try-SERRA-tops) and a towering Ceratosaurus (Serra-tow-SAW-Russ) fight it out in "One Million Years B.C." Both dinosaurs lived in the jurassic period and were about twenty feet in length. The Triceratops is easily distinguished by his three horns and the armor plate guarding his soft neck. The Ceratosaurus, so called for the small horn on his snout, is the carnivorous (flesh-eating) cousin of the Tyranosaurus (Ty-ran-o-SAW-Russ).

"One Million Years B.C." is more than a rip roaring adventure film. It is extremely informative. As Raquel Welch fights her way through the remarkably realistic prehistoric landscape, she encounters beasts that give the layman and the student an excellent graphic picture of zoology, "One Million Years B.C."

Terror From The Skies!

The winged reptile, pteradactyl (Terra-DACK-till), was certainly one of the most menacing of creatures. This flying reptile, like its animal counterpart, the bat, had wings of skin stretched between long finger bones. Unlike the bat, the pteradactyl grew to tremendous size and was capable of devouring large life forms.

A 40 Ton Mountain Of Flesh With Just 4 Teeth

The Brontosaurus (Bron-tow-SAW-russ), or "Thunder Lizard," was a large and foreboding behemoth. Oddly, this moving mountain of flesh existed solely on soft wet vegetation. Feeding his forty tons of bulk was a very small head containing but four simple peg teeth. Still, the sight of this beast and the rumble of the earth beneath him, froze the hearts of man and every animal that lived. "One Million Years B.C."

GIANT CLEMMYS GUTTATA (Klem-ees-goo-TA-ta) MENACES MAN "ONE MILLION YEARS B.C."

This giant forerunner of the modern day sea turtle, weighed tons and had jaws powerful enough to snap large trees at their base and battle the most gigantic dinosaurs.
